Every morning a Soviet airplane makes a daylight reconnaissance flight over the Baltic Sea. The route covered is as follows: The flight starts in the Tallinn area (possibly Üsel or Dago); from there the plane crosses the Baltic to the southern tip of Öland Island, outside of Swedish territorial waters; the plane then approaches the northwestern tip of Bornholm Island, and continues on in a southerly direction; about halfway between Bornholm and the coast of Pomerania the plane turns east and disappears over the Baltic in the Lepaya area.
